Proclamation of Appointment and Record of Service

Chief Daniel Jacob Read IV – Sovereign Leader of the Kalapula Nation & Kingdom of Mythelinia

Foundations in Ancestry and Stewardship

Chief Daniel Jacob Read IV was shaped from the earliest days by the enduring wisdom of his Grandparents, Richard O. Read and Bobbie Read. For more than thirty years, they guided him in the traditions of honest enterprise, stewardship of the land, and the long view of legacy. Their 160-acre property on Scott's Valley Road near the Blue Lakes in California served not only as a home but as a living classroom in discipline, vision, and responsibility.

Life on the property was a blessing — one of the Chief's personal heavens. His wonderful parents, Daniel Elmer Read and Deborah Joy Read, raised him and his nine brothers and sisters in one home, while his Grandparents lived just on the other side of the property. This close-knit, multigenerational setting provided constant connection, shared work, and shared joy, laying a foundation of family loyalty and resilience that continues to define his leadership style.

Formative Years and Education

In his youth, Chief Read transitioned from the valleys of California to Corvallis, Oregon, where he entered Crescent Valley High School as a freshman. The cultural and environmental diversity of the Willamette Valley broadened his vision, laying the groundwork for a leadership style that blends rural resilience with forward-looking innovation.

A Lifelong Bond with Corvallis

The Chief's relationship with Corvallis is both deep and enduring. After spending nineteen years in Denver, Colorado — years marked by a persistent sense of longing — every visit to Corvallis felt magical, each trip intensifying the call of this place. Over time, he came to understand that this connection was not simply about the beauty of the town, but about the land's living memory and the people tied to it. Discovering the history of the Kalapula Tribe further deepened this bond. During that period, he purchased a home in Corvallis, along with other properties in the surrounding region. Though many of those holdings have since been sold, his connection to Corvallis has never wavered, and he declares without hesitation that he will never let go of this town.

Decades of Executive Leadership

With over two decades of high-level executive experience, Chief Read has been a dynamic presence in the world of business and strategic management. He assumed his first CEO position in 2002 and, from March 2006 to July 2025, served as Chief Executive Officer of 333 CORP (DBA LegacyATM.com). During his tenure, he transformed the company into a national force in the ATM services sector, steering its expansion with precision, maintaining operational stability, and building a culture of lawful growth and sustained client trust.

Family as a Core of Leadership

A proud father of five, Chief Read's work is deeply personal. His vision for sovereignty and restoration is not only for the present generation but for the children of tomorrow — both his own and those of the nations he serves. He views leadership as an inheritance to be preserved, protected, and passed forward in better condition than it was received.

Retirement from Corporate Leadership – Transition to Sovereign Service

In July 2025, Chief Read retired from his corporate post to dedicate himself fully to the leadership of the Kalapula Nation and the Kingdom of Mythelinia. His current mission is centered on building economic sovereignty, restoring cultural memory, and implementing the Lost Bird Sanctuary Initiative — a global network of safe return spaces for Indigenous peoples to visit their ancestral lands with dignity, security, and comfort.

Principles of Governance

The Chief governs with a philosophy of sovereignty without militarization, restoration without displacement, and economic empowerment without coercion. His belief is that nations can achieve security and prosperity through cooperation, remembrance, and business acumen, rather than through force. He stands as a modern example of how traditional values can drive contemporary diplomacy, economic development, and cultural preservation.

Vision for the Future

Looking ahead, Chief Read’s vision is one of interconnected sanctuaries across the globe, where Indigenous peoples are welcomed home, history is honored, and sustainable prosperity flows across borders. His work aims to leave a living legacy — one in which the Kalapula Nation and Kingdom of Mythelinia are known as beacons of remembrance, peace, and restoration.

With memory, reverence, and flame,
